BREXIT

Looking back on what I wrote before Brexit was a fact, it went as bad as it could possibly do.

No use in recapitulating the many thousands who regretted their vote when they realised the consequences of actually leaving the union, consequences that are enormous and something we still have not seen the full effect from.

And then getting Shabby Boris as Foreign Secretary – his dreams of becoming the new PM smashed quite early in the aftermath, was a serious downturn for him stabbed in the back by his closest ally. I guess the new PM Mrs Theresa May have placed him there for a reason and it will be interesting to see how he handles this for him totally new position.

As expected Ukip leader Nigel Farage now leaves the ship after having accomplished what he set out for, is as disgusting as it can possibly be. Sad when people start to believe in easy solution sand populist propaganda.

Next step will be evoking $50 and as announced by the PM, April 2017 starts a process that might take two to three years. Believing that it is possible to replace the markets lost in Europe with China and India plus other third world markets is at the best naïve.

Western Europe has been without wars for over 70 years now. This is all thanks to the unions established after the 2nd world war. You are less likely to have your neighbour shooting at you if you have a prosperous business going on together. So like it or not, we need more Union not less if we are to build a better, more fair and less troublesome future.

People that believe that closed borders and no free trade is the future is walking backwards into tomorrow and the challenges ahead.

Looking back at all we have achieved by establishing EFTA on this side and NAFTA on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean, with growth benefiting all people. This can only continue if we establish more openness and ability for free trade. It is very important to understand that it is not States or governments that trade between each other, it is the individuals in each country that stands for development and progress and the ability to exchange goods makes us all prosperous.

US PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

It is impossible not to say a few words about what goes on in the US and the candidates in place. Let me start by saying “How is it possible that such a Great Nation can end up with two so useless candidates?”

Must be thousand candidates better suited for the job than these two.

Hillary Clinton should not have been allowed to stand in the first place. This will be the 3rd period with Clintons at the White House (if she wins) and the constitution is only open for two. A change here is imperative.

Having a President unable to distinguish between private and official correspondence is in itself reason enough not to vote for her. Why did the Democrats not use their eminent Foreign Minister, Secretary of State John Kerry as a candidate?

But obviously realising where we are, will she be better than the alternative, the bully Trump?

My concern is as always the economic side of things. No doubt that the US economy has improved and new jobs have been created. With Clinton at the wheel we will see more or less the same direction as now.

They will continue to borrow a lot and the world will be willing to lend them money. Ask yourself why?

Trump although being a business man understands very little of what makes the world go around. No-one has stolen American jobs and the Chinese are not devaluing their currency to take the better of the Americans. When his advisors on economy also comes up with what you may simply call a lot of crap, it starts to become pretty scaring.

We have still some time to go and it will be exciting to see the last debate and the results of the polls – although as we saw in the UK, Polls are one thing who's voting and what they will vote something totally different.

RUSSIA – STILL IN HUGE TROUBLE

When the old Soviet Union was dissolved on December 26, 1991, many with me thought we finally would see the world moving forward in peace and prosperity – these two factors are keys for that to happen, and for a while it looked very promising, but then we got Putin. He has a twisted idea about the West like that we are going to attack him.

He keeps on backing up the Syrian regime fully aware of that this will not give any solution to the problem.

He also keeps up the war against Ukraine and denies shooting down a civilian airplane from Malaysia although overwhelming evidence was presented showing who the perpetrators were.

Financially they are badly hurt and sooner or later the people of Russia will arise again and get rid of this old fashioned Tsar type. But he is shrewd and scrupulous and will keep on working creating this terrible enemy – the West- and blaming us for all the miseries he has put the country into.

The big unanswered question is of course how long will he be able to keep it going – unfortunately for us all despots have a tendency of surviving far longer than they should.

CURRENCY & INTEREST RATES

The US has been talking for quite some time (since 2015) of increasing their interest rate.

On September 21st they had their last meeting. The outcome from Mrs. Janet L. Yellen was as expected, with no increase and that calmed the markets.

NOK/USD is now trading at 8.00. Fairly stable on lower levels. The NOK has been the strongest European currency for many months and with an oil price around 50 USD it will strengthen even more.

EUR/USD has been fairly stable around 1.12 since the beginning of 2015. The expected fall in the Euro is still on hold. Deutsche Bank's astronomic fine seems to be reduced with 2/3 so it seems like a drop as a consequence of this no longer is that threatening.

GB£/US$ trading at 1.27 has fallen from 1.6 early 2015. The Pound has hit an all-time low for decades Against NOK it has gone from 13.25 to 10.00. With the PM's statement of bringing the Central bank back under political control this can only go one way. This is like socialist governments operated in the 60's.
